FRIDAY, APRIL 17, 1896.

A Common Sense Question. The money question is at the present time confusing many people. It not only disturbs those who make a daily struggle to get it, but those who are burdened with the question of how best to invest it. The system (if our present status may be so digni fied) of finances now in operation is unsatisfactory to a large number of people and certainly needs improving. It seems that the few popular theories that are offered are more or less extreme and need to be considered curefully. All theories present some facts worthy of consideration, and whoever forgets this proves himself to be out of harmony with the genius of modern government and the spirit of pro-

Indeed, i is a financial theory that every statesman, economist and financier must reckon with, to say the least. The real difficulty in the way of settling the financial question is that too many men take sectional views of it. Money is for the entire people and not only for bankers and mine owners.
